1. Racial profiling is a mechanism to prevent future terrorist attacks.
According to Jack Greer, staff writer at the Stanford Review, the main reason for racial profiling is to help stop terrorists. The U.S. is engaged in a global struggle against Islamic fundamentalists, and it is a fact that most of these terrorists are Arab, hence the special attention given to them in airports.
2. It's an effective tool of policing
Racial profiling increases the likelihood that the investments of police efforts will lead to more arrests, as argued by Simon Keller on publicreason.net.

Joe Arpaio, Sheriff of Arizona, uses tactics involving race as a factor to target illegal immigrants, but because of these tactics he and his deputies have identified 6000 illegal immigrants, according to a Los Angeles Times article.
